

Worried about your children learning?

Use everyday experiences as learning opportunities. What's going on in your neighborhood? What's everyone talking about? Use the excitement and interest in these topics to get your child thinking. Here's an easy tip to help you use daily happenings to help your child:

Start by asking what your child knows or heard about what's happened locally or in the world. Then look through the newspaper and read stories about the event. Is the word in the neighborhood the same or different than what's reported? How might your child tell the story?
